*Celebrating Women in Science &
Showcasing Careers in Biology*

Jamie Stalker, M.D., Medical Director for Argonne National Laboratory, presents the 26th Joan Wood Lecture. . .

Flexibility and the Fickle Finger of Fate: A Peculiar Path from Musician to Medical Director

Wednesday, October 3, 2007 | 4:00 p.m. | Myers Hall 130

Dr. Stalker has worked as an internist and clinical instructor over the past 16 years and is a member of the American Biological Safety Association, American College of Occupational and Environmental Medicine, National Supplemental Screening Advisory Committee, and the Chicago Medical Directors' Group. She has been trained in and practiced emergency response for chemical and radiation exposure, employee health, occupational clearance, personal emergency care, safety inspections, and wellness programming.

In 2004, Dr. Stalker became Medical Director at Argonne National Laboratory, where she worked previously as an internist. Dr. Stalker received her B.S. in Biology from IU in 1983 and her M.D. from Rush Medical College in 1988.

After the lecture, meet the speaker and enjoy complimentary pizza and beverages.
